History

In 1999, U.S. Rep. Maurice Hinchey announced that the USDA was launching an economic development pilot project designed to mitigate the effects of job losses to rural communities and create an environment for long-term economic growth.

Congressman Hinchey negotiated a Memorandum of Agreement with the USDA to establish its rural development initiative in the region.

The Tioga County REAP, along with another REAP project in Sullivan County, NY were the first pilot programs of their kind and were meant to serve as a national model for flexible rural development around the country. The pilot set up a collaborative and citizen-led effort to enhance economic development. Eventually there were five designated REAP zones in the United States.

What Does REAP Do?

REAP Board

Each of Tioga County's fifteen municipalities may appoint a REAP representative to serve on the REAP Board. The Board can also include six members-at-large who represent broader county-wide issues.

County-Wide Initiatives

REAP has partnered in several studies to benefit Tioga County (TC) as a whole, including the:

- 2018 Tioga County Housing Strategy Action Plan
- TC Code Enforcement Feasibility Study
- TC 2020-2025 Tioga County Workforce Development Pipeline Strategy

Community Partnerships

To accomplish its mission, REAP has worked to build strong partnerships with area municipalities as well as agencies such as Tioga County Economic Development & Planning, Tioga Opportunities, the Tioga County Industrial Development Agency, and Southern Tier 8.
